Culture:—Gladioli should be planted in a good rich soil,—the richer the better—and when possible placed in a new location each season. Pulverize the soil thoroughly putting bone meal and wood ashes deep in the furrow before placing the bulbs, care being taken to cover the fertilizer with soil so that it will not come in contact with the bulbs. Plant six inches deep and then the stalks require no supports. Weekly applications of prepared sheep manure and frequent waterings at evenings will greatly stimulate plant growth and the lasting qualities of the blooms. Work the soil well and frequently on the morning following the previous night's watering until the flowers appear, then surface cultivation will be sufficient. When grown for effect plant between annuals or perennials that have foliage at their base or in clumps in front of low growing shrubs. When cutting always leave a set of leaves with the remaining stem. Lift in October or November and store in a dry cool cellar, drying thoroughly in the sun before storage.
